II THE WORLD OF L'EMPEREUR

L'empereur takes place in the violent aftermath of the French Revolution. You step in as the undaunted hero - Napoleon. Your goal is to unify Europe.

You have authority at 2 command levels: officer and government. You start off as an officer in charge of city affairs and the military. Your duty is to defeat belligerent nations. With the people's support you will rise in rank to First Consul and then Emperor. At that point you gain authority over government commands, to execute domestic and foreign policy. Using these new powers, strengthen France and focus on the unification of Europe.

■ COMMAND HIERARCHY

Commanding ranks are abbreviated as follows:

Ofc.....	Officer
Rsv .....	Officer in Reserve
PRI .....	Prisoner of War
Com .....	Commander
C.C .....	Commander-in-chief
F.C.....	First Consul
Emp .....	Emperor
Mon .....	Monarch
Dir .....	Directorate

46 different European cities are presented in L'Empereur. Every nation covers a number of cities. View nation, city and officer data to estimate your status among other nations.

Depending on Napoleon's military rank, he issues commands at the officer or government command levels. At his lowest ranking he is a Commander involved in city strategy and military affairs.

When Napoleon is promoted to First Consul he takes on new responsibilities at the government command level. Formulate national strategy in addition to your usual duties.

After ascending to the throne, Napoleon's authority expands again. In addition to national strategy, relocate his brothers and son to rule over distant lands.

■ GAME FLOW AND OBJECTIVES

Note : Months are abbreviated in this manual, but appear in full on-screen.

The game calendar is divided into 12 months and 4 seasons: spring (Mar-May), summer (June-Aug), autumn (Sept-Nov), and winter (Dec-Feb). Execute officer commands each month and government commands at the beginning of each season. In the course of defeating your neighbors, collect taxes, pay stipends, survive harsh winters and deal with other natural disasters. Be prepared for strikes, rebellions, and military uprisings.

Build up your army and charge into war. Starting with the defending side, each commanding officer has 1 chance per day to execute field commands. If a victor is not decided within 30 days at war, regular play resumes.

Work your way through L'Empereur month by month, organizing your military and assailing your enemies. You can only fail if you die or fall prisoner to the enemy.

THE PROCESSION OF WAR

Troops are positioned, defenders first, in any HEX marked with a circle. Once all troops are positioned the battle begins.

Each unit receives 1 order per day, starting with the defender. You may command units in any order (select with cursor).

Commands vary depending on the unit. Each day, every 100 soldiers consume 2 cases of food.

During the battle, a neighboring allied city may send in reinforcements for the defender.

VICTORY

Battles are fought for 30 days or until one side is victorious:

Attacker's Victory: Occupy all forts within the city or eradicate all defending troops.

Defender's Victory: Defend the city for 30 days with troops remaining.

POST-WAR SETTLEMENTS

The victor wins authority over the city in which battle took place. The city will reflect any damage taken during the battle. Food provisions from the opposing army or armies will be confiscated for the city, and all officers who fought for the victor will be stationed there. Empty posts will be filled at random by available officers. Any officers caught during war become POWs (Prisoners Of War).

Terrain, weather and a change of seasons can all affect the procession of war. Some terrain will hinder movement under harsh weather, while other terrain can be used to aid your defense.

Terrain Features

River: Only infantry can cross rivers, but soldiers are sure to drown. Build bridges to facilitate safe crossing. Explosions and cannon fire will destroy bridges.

Swamp: Artillery units will get stuck in the mud if they enter swamp areas.

Sand Bar: Artillery units may be able to creep across sand bars if they have enough mobility points in store. If soldiers slip while crossing, their whole unit will jump back to the original HEX.

Hills / Mountains: There are five levels to climb between the grassy plains and mountains A. You cannot move directly into a HEX 2 levels above you. Depending on altitude, mountains can block cannon fire, and improve defensive ability.

Weather: Bad weather will exhaust mobility points and hinder bridge building, explosions, charging and cannon fire.

Winter: Except in southern regions, wintry weather will hinder all movement and attacks. Mountains B, rivers, and sand bars are impassable this season, yet lakes freeze over for crossing. If you are attacked under cannon fire on the ice, your troops may fall through. Artillery attacks are impossible in blizzards.

Mobility points vary for each unit according to terrain:

Terrain	Inf.	Cav.	Art.	Defense	Features
Mtns A	X	X	X	No entry
Mtns B	7	6	8		No entry in winter
Hills C	6	5	7	B
Hills D	5	4	6

River	10	X	X	G	Soldiers drown No entry in winter
Lake / Sea	X	X	X	No entry	Frozen up north in winter

<> indicates what attributes are important to carrying out a command. * indicates what attributes will be affected.

MOVE (All units)

Move troops on the battlefield. You can attack from your position next to an enemy, or continue moving if you have enough mobility points. In general, cavalry units have the most mobility and artillery units the least. This war command does not appear on-screen; select a unit and direct it with the cursor and A.

ATTACK (Infantry & Cavalry units)

Attack an adjacent enemy by moving directly into them. This command does not appear on-screen.

COMMAND (Field Commander menu)*Encourage

<>Leadership *Morale

Encourage troops from the commanding officer's unit and raise morale in adjacent units.

Recovery

<>Leadership *Disorder among soldiers

Sometimes troops are so devastated that they cannot fight. Although they recover slowly, this command quickly recharges troops.

Mobilize

*Reserves

Mobilize reserves to replace soldiers under the commanding officer or in adjacent infantry. Pull up to 100 men onto the battlefield in one turn.

Activate

Pull officers from reserves into a defensive effort.

REST

(All troops)

Rest troops at current position. This will raise the morale of a unit in low spirits.

WITHDRAW

(All troops)

Withdraw to an adjacent city under your control. Morale will drop. Some officers may defect to the enemy during withdrawal procedures. If any officers remain after a war, yet there is no city to withdraw to, they will take to the streets as normal citizens. Later they can be recruited as reserves. If the commanding officer withdraws, the war will continue under another commander.

BRIDGE

(Infantry only)

<>Building

Build a bridge. Success depends on weather, building skills and the number of soldiers at work.

EXPLODE

(Infantry only)

<>Building

Blow up a bridge. Success depends on the weather, building skills and the number of soldiers at work.

CHARGE

(Cavalry only)

<>Cavalry

ABANDON

(Artillery only)

Abandon cannons and become an infantry unit. You will lose all artillery and the soldiers' morale will drop.

SPECIAL COMMANDS*View

View date, place, weather, and warring abilities of both armies. Push any button to view the battlefield. Push again to return to the war scene.

Cannon Range

Check your enemy's range of cannon fire. Colored HEXes indicate the range.

Stall

End turns for every unit which has not yet received commands.

VI FOLLOW THE TIDE OF FORTUNE !

There are certain regular events and random events which occur throughout Europe.

REGULAR EVENTS

Population Growth: Population increases each year.

City Data Decreases: Any number of events will have a negative effect on your city. Your officers, soldiers, and industry are just a few things that can be affected.

Tax Revenue: Every city takes in direct taxes in Jan. Indirect taxes are collected in relation to commercial worth (trade) in Mar-June-Sept & Dec. A direct tax goes to the national treasury in Jan as well as an indirect tax from every designated supply city in Mar-June-Sept & Dec.

Harvest: Crops are harvested in Sept. In Nov, food is collected from supply cities for the national treasury.

Production: Materials are produced in Mar-June-Sept & Dec. Supply cities send materials to the national treasury in May & Nov.

Officers' Stipends / Fleet Maintenance: Officers' stipends and funds for fleet maintenance are paid in Mar & Nov. Repairs cost 5 gold per ship.

To the People: Food and materials are distributed to the people in Mar-June-Sept & Dec. The people may strike if they do not have sufficient supplies of food or materials.

Supplies: The soldiers are provided food supplies every Apr & Oct. If there is not enough food to go around, the remaining soldiers will desert your army rather than go hungry.

Arms Production: Arms are manufactured and become government property in Mar-June-Sept & Dec.

RANDOM EVENTS

Officers Appear: Each year new officers will appear on the scene and they may join your reserves.

Military Rebellion: Dissatisfied officers with low loyalty are likely to rebel. They may defect to other nations.

Strikes / Civil Rebellion: The townspeople may rebel if they are dissatisfied, especially when food and material supplies are low. Strikes halt all production and reduce indirect tax revenues by 50%. Rebellions can devastate a city.

Cholera / The Plague: When food and materials supplies are low, epidemics spread. Medical development will lessen the people's suffering, but it may not affect the plague.

Cold Weather Damage / Poor Harvest / Farming: The harvest will be poor after an unseasonable summer frost.

Spanish Civil Rebellion: If you secure territory in Spain the townspeople may rebel. As a result, reserves, morale and food supplies will increase in Spain.

Guerrilla Attack / Cossack Attack: Surprise attacks are common when you occupy cities in Spanish or Russian territory. If attacked, you will lose soldiers and reserves. When transporting goods into these territories, guerrillas or Cossack thieves may attack from ambush and loot your supplies.

VIII RECORD OF NAPOLEON'S CONQUEST

A HERO EMERGES!

From impoverished Corsica, a Mediterranean island under French rule, emerged a man unlike any other in the history of Europe. He was Napoleon Bonaparte.

Born into nobility, Napoleon was educated at a military academy in Paris. He went to arms as an artillery officer in the tumult of the French Revolution. His first victory was to capture Toulon from anti-revolutionary forces. At the age of 26, Napoleon was appointed Commander of the French Army of Italy.

WINNING THE RESPECT OF HIS MEN

Dressed in rags and poorly equipped, Napoleon and his men were the center of ridicule. His subordinate officers eyed him with contempt, yet when he laid down the plan for battle, he convinced them that he was the one in command.

Turning to his bedraggled soldiers, Napoleon said, "Brave men! France hasn't the power to clothe you, to feed you, nor arm you to its own defense. You are worthy and valiant men. I will lead you across the fertile plains of this continent. Glory, fame and abounding wealth await you! Soldiers of the Army of Italy, obey my command!"

The soldiers looked to their new commander with respect. Prospects of victory transformed the tired soldiers into an army of steel.

LIFE-AND-DEATH STRUGGLE AT LODI

The finest troops of the Austrian army were positioned in Milan, ready to fend off the French army. This land was a place of strategic importance to breaking into northern Italy. The two armies faced off across the single bridge spanning the river between them. The odds were against the French; they were outnumbered 2 to 1.

The French charged across the bridge and the Austrians fired point-blank into them. With each step soldiers fell into piles on the bridge. Unable to withstand the onslaught, they turned to retreat. Then suddenly the regimental colors appeared at the front. Napoleon Bonaparte stood undaunted before his men and shouted: "If any of you are brave enough-come to arms!"

His commanders raced to protect their leader! With newfound courage the soldiers charged into the enemy. The Austrians could not stop them and were forced back from Lodi.

In Napoleon's next campaign he led his soldiers on to capture Castiglione, Arcole,

NAPOLEON France
Napoleon Bonaparte was a man of rare military genius. Rising up at the time of the French Revolution, he led the Grande Armée across Europe. At the height of his career, he was crowned Emperor of France. His perseverance and relentless tactics left a great impression in the annals of European history.

BERTHIER France
Louis Berthier was a veteran of war, having participated in the American Revolution. He served as Napoleon's chief of staff. Though he was a modest man, he is credited for having led the French army on to many victories. When Napoleon escaped from Elba Island, Berthier suffered a nervous breakdown and died.

and Rivoli. Then, after subjugating northern Italy, he turned his troops towards Vienna. Austria proposed a truce to escape defeat, whereupon Napoleon agreed. Thereafter he made a triumphant return to Paris.

THE STRENGTH OF THE FATHERLAND

The fervor of the revolution spread throughout the nation, and other major powers in Europe joined in a coalition against France. Attacked from the interior and exterior, the people were caught in a desperate struggle for their rights.

In Paris, Director Barras was involved in a struggle of his own. Napoleon was popular among the people, and he feared he would be the next to try to overthrow him. Consequently he appointed Napoleon to a difficult position as commander-in-chief of the Army of England, to try to get rid of him.

A direct attack on England looked dangerous in view of their mighty navy. However, an indirect attack would weaken them. Napoleon set off to attack British territory in Egypt. The expedition to Egypt exhausted many soldiers, but Napoleon insisted they continue. "Brave soldiers! 4000 years of history will witness our battle on these sands!" His confident words gave his soldiers new strength.

Back in France, the people were faced with a new problem: a second coalition had emerged. The Directorate in Paris recognized that they needed Napoleon to save France. They called him back to Paris, and Napoleon returned. A new challenge awaited him at home.

CROSSING THE WINTER ALPS

Once back in Paris, Napoleon staged a coup d'etat with the help of his brother, Lucien, and Talleyrand. They set up a new government on the 18th of November, 1799.

Now seated as First Consul, Napoleon shouldered the responsibility to pacify France. He had to restore law and order, revitalize the economy, and reorganize the army. Meanwhile, to fight off the second coalition against France, he renewed his attack on Italy. The Austrian army was spurred to fortify their defense.

Massena was the sole French officer in northern Italy, and the Austrian army had him backed into a corner. Most officers believed they could save him by attacking from the coastline. But, when Napoleon heard their plans he said, "Our enemy would love such a feeble plan! They have a strong defense along the coastal route. I am going to outwit them." Thus his army began the roundabout trek through the Alps.

In the winter, any route through the

MASSENA

France

Andre Massena had 7 years of experience in the struggle against Italy. He proved a reliable commander, and was promoted from Lord of Rivoli to Earl of Essling for great war deeds. However, in battle in Spain he lost the power to lead his troops any further, and was defeated by the Duke of Wellington (England).

BARRAS

Paul Francois Barras was a product of political corruption. He took over as president of France in the coup d'etat of 1795, in which the royalist factions suppressed the revolutionaries. He was overthrown in a coup staged by Napoleon in 1799. In 1810, Barras was banished from France.

Alps was a treacherous road to navigate. Heavy artillery had to be carried through the dangerous passes. And, there were sure to be casualties when the snow began to thaw. Nevertheless, the French army made it through to northern Italy once again.

They met the Austrian defense in Marengo and went to arms. There were rumors back home that the French were already defeated. The odds were clearly against them. Yet, reinforcements came in, led by Desaix and Kellerman. Desaix died in this battle, but the French were victorious again!

EMPEROR NAPOLEON

The victory at Marengo showed that France was back on the road to power. As anti-French sentiment died down, former coalition members tried to make peace with France; even England offered peace.

However, not everyone was satisfied with Napoleon's tactics. French and British royalists formed a conspiracy to overthrow him. In spite of their secret efforts, they never got hold of him. Now seated as First Consul, Napoleon was protected more closely than ever before. Head Commissioner Fouché noticed that people supported him to rise up as emperor of their nation. He called a national assembly at which they decided to let the people vote. Did they want Emperor Napoleon? He was approved: 3,652,000 in favor, 3,000 against.

Thus, in December 1804, Napoleon Bonaparte was crowned at Notre Dame Cathedral.

STORMING ACROSS EUROPE

Napoleon's ascension to the throne, opened up old wounds in the European community. Other major powers felt threatened by the sweeping changes in France, reflecting anti-revolutionary sentiment. Thus, Austria, Prussia, Russia and England united in a third coalition against France.

In order to break the coalition, the central force in the league, England, had to be destroyed. Napoleon dispatched his navy full force into the channel between England and France, led by his most cunning officers: Bernadotte, Ney, Marmont, Lannes, Davout, Soult, Murat, Bessières, and Augereau. This offensive, 220 thousand strong, comprised the 'Grande Armée.'

Napoleon wanted to gain sea control over the Straits of Dover. He planned to break through the British blockade at the Straits of Gibraltar, then join up with the French Atlantic fleet and Spanish reinforcements. The British would be trapped in their own territory.

Austria and Russia closely followed the

TALLEYRAND France
Charles Maurice Talleyrand, an ex-bishop with a crippled leg, was an eccentric. He served as Minister of Foreign Affairs for France. At one time his loyalty for Napoleon waned and he conspired with anti-French coalition powers. However, at the Congress of Vienna Talleyrand directed negotiations with such skill that he restored France in the eyes of other leaders.

SOULT France
Nicholas Jean de Soult was made a Marshal in the French Army in 1804. Composed in any situation, he was a key commander in many major battles. After Napoleon escaped from Elba Island, he was appointed Chief of Staff. He went on to fill positions as Minister of War, and Prime Minister.

changes in eastern France. When Napoleon deployed his eastern troops for the British assault, they knew they could begin to advance. Once again, Europe fell under the dark cloud of gun smoke.

ATTENTION TO THE EAST!

With trouble approaching from the east, Napoleon redirected the Grande Armée back to the border. They defeated the Austrian army at Ulm, and continued towards Vienna, where the Russians were camped. Kutusov got word of the Austrian defeat and ordered the Russian army to retreat.

Suddenly the French army was in danger. The allied French-Spanish fleet smoldered in ruins, defeated by Captain Nelson, of England. And, Franz II of Austria and Alexander I of Russia closed in from the north around Vienna. In previous battles, Napoleon's strategy was to concentrate his army around the enemy, but they were split in two different directions now. There was no choice but to forfeit conquest of England, and dispatch the bulk of the army to the east.

Then events came to a head. The Austrian, Russian and French armies came together at Austerlitz and plunged into war. Napoleon was attacked in the right flank and beaten back from the Pratzen Plateau. Soult, Lannes and Murat retaliated and scattered the enemy league. They forced the Russian army to flee through Tellnitz across the frozen Satschan Pond. Napoleon was waiting for them and ordered rapid fire down on the ice. With the weight of the men and their artillery, plus the barrage from French cannons—CRACK!—the Russian army fell through the ice. It was an amazing victory for Napoleon!

The battle at Austerlitz marked the one-hundredth day since Napoleon's coronation as Emperor.

THE CONTINENTAL BLOCKADE

Two days after the battle at Austerlitz, France and Austria made peace. The following year Napoleon returned to his conquest of Europe. In a renewed effort to expand the French frontier he appointed his brothers and son in the reaches of French territory. Then to completely rout the Prussian army he attacked Jena and Auerstadt, and concentrated his army around Berlin. Once again Napoleon's strategy prompted a response from his enemies: Prussia, England and Russia united in the 4th anti-French coalition.

As strong as the British were, they feared the French were gaining too much power. They tried to support the anti-French coalition by supplying capital and arms to opposition forces. In retaliation Napoleon ordered a continental blockade

JOSEPHINE France
Empress Josephine was Napoleon's first wife, and 6 years his elder. Exquisite and refined, she was admired by the elite. She and Napoleon divorced, but later remarried so that her son could be heir to the throne. Later while her husband was in exile on Elba Island, she passed away at her castle, Malmaison.

FOUCHE France
Joseph Fouché partook in intrigue and money-making schemes. He had sources who supplied him with blackmail material on his opponents in government. After the Revolution he served as Head Commissioner for two consecutive terms. However, as a result of his checkered past, he himself was later ejected from the fatherland.

against England. For a country that relied heavily upon trade, this order was a direct threat to British development.

In order to enforce the blockade Napoleon had to gain control of the coalition. With the Prussian army under his power, he used them to push the Russian army back from Eylau, and swiftly seized Friedland. After further losses at Tilsit and Königsberg, the Russians solicited Napoleon for relief, resulting in a peace treaty. Prussia was reduced to a minor power under Germany. Russia and France joined in alliance, and the continental blockade was complete.

PURSUING ENEMIES ON ALL SIDES

The continental blockade seemed to work. British imports were completely banned from Europe. On the other hand, the European merchants lost a major importer of their goods. Angry with the trade block, anti-French sentiment rose up again. The situation grew even worse for the French when the British attacked from the Iberian peninsula. Guerrilla armies added to the assault.

When the French gradually began to weaken, Austria joined in the fighting. Ever-cautious Napoleon quickly redirected his army and beat them back at Abensberg and Eggmühl. Yet, in the next battle at Aspern, Napoleon's men were outnumbered 3 to 1. They were defeated with ease, and Lannes died in the same battle. Napoleon retaliated at Wagram, and this time his troops dominated.

A DARKER HORIZON

In France, the people were overjoyed with their leader's success. Yet, Napoleon was nervous about the lack of an heir. He and Empress Josephine did not have a son.

Metternich of Austria, urged him to remarry with the princess from his country, Marie Louise. Napoleon agreed. He left Josephine and married Marie Louise in April, 1810.

In March, 1811, a salute of guns resounded in Paris to commemorate the birth of the Crown Prince. The people celebrated in the hopes of peace and security for their nation.

There was one country which did not take the new intimacy between France and Austria so lightly. It was the empire in the east - Russia. The Russians resented Napoleon's abuse and demanded territory in Poland. But Napoleon had no intention of giving up the land he had won. Hence Russia withdrew from the continental blockade and united with England.

NELSON

England

Admiral Horatio Nelson was the pride of the British Navy. A missing eye and a crippled leg were his war scars, and blatant proof of his valor. He died in battle at Trafalgar after defeating the French fleet. His triumph ruined Napoleon's hopes to ever capture England.

MURAT

France

Joachim Murat was loyal to Napoleon in his career. Undaunted upon the battlefield, he commanded a valiant cavalry regiment. He became King of Naples when he married Napoleon's sister, Caroline. After defeat at Waterloo he was executed with a 'coup de grace'.

A COSTLY VENTURE

The continental blockade was the key tactic in Napoleon's plan to overthrow England. It was almost complete when Russia joined forces with England. Thus Napoleon turned his wrath towards Russia.

The French army had 550,000 men, including forces led by Berthier, Ney, Davout, Murat, and Poniatowski. Their soldiers, from France, Germany, Italy, Poland and Holland, represented the blockade that spanned the continent.

"Soldiers!" Napoleon addressed his men, "This expedition will guarantee peace and harmony for all of Europe!"

"Vive l'Empereur! Long live the Emperor!" they resounded.

On June 6, 1812, the Grande Armée set off for Moscow. When they reached the faraway plains of Russia, the intense cold of winter settled over their troops. Yet, Napoleon refused to abandon his plan. The advance was a painstaking and costly process. The soldiers weren't prepared to face the cold, and thousands perished every step of the way.

Finally the army arrived in Moscow, reduced to 150,000 weak men. Napoleon hastily declared victory over Russia and began the long trek for home.

BLUCHER

Prussia

Gebhard Leberecht von Blücher had 7 years of experience at the head of the Prussian army. He repeatedly met Napoleon on the battlefield, only to be defeated each time. At Waterloo he overpowered Napoleon at last, marking his greatest victory. In the post-war Congress of Vienna he supported the decision to sentence Napoleon to a firing squad in retribution for war crimes.

LANNES

France

Jean Lannes was in competition with Murat for most of his career, starting with the battle at Lodi. He led his troops on many glorious expeditions for Napoleon, and eventually was made a Marshal in the French Army. At Aspern he took a fatal blow in battle and died.

METTERNICH

Austria

Clemens von Metternich, Minister of Foreign Affairs for Austria, closely followed the revolution in France. Meeting with Napoleon, he skillfully argued to preserve some dignity for his country. Promoted to Prime Minister after Napoleon's demise, he remained in power most of his life.

ALEXANDER I

Russia

Tsar Alexander I inherited his position when his father was executed. He oversaw the alliance between Russia and England to form the core of the 'anti-Napoleon' movement. Russia yielded to France temporarily after the defeat of Prussia, however the Tsar built up his military again to win the final victory over Napoleon.

KELLERMAN France

Francois Kellerman was a magnificent officer in the French army, though he was of German descent. In battles at Marengo and Austerlitz his troops came through victorious and without many losses. At Waterloo he fought under General Ney.

KUTUSOV Russia

Mikhail Kutusov was an elder general in the Russian army. He preferred negotiation to combat whenever possible, but during the Austerlitz campaign, Tsar Alexander I forced him to go to arms. During the Russian campaign he retreated and succeeded in drawing the fatigued French troops after him. When they were forced to withdraw, Kutusov was credited for masterminding the Russian victory.

DAVOUT France

Louis Davout was a steadfast Republican and devoted militarist. In 1804, he was promoted to General of the Army. In the war against Prussia he proved a worthy commander and was the first to occupy Berlin. After Napoleon escaped from Elba Island, Davout served as Minister of the Continental Army.

NEY France

Michel Ney was appointed Minister of War in 1804. When the French army withdrew from Russia he took up the rear guard to fend off pursuers. Thus he won praise as "a hero among heroes." At Waterloo he took La Haye Sainte with a cavalry of merely 10,000 men. Yet after the French were defeated, the royalist party sentenced him to his demise.

WELLINGTON England

His true name was Arthur Wellesley. He won fame for recapturing Madrid in the war against Portugal. At Waterloo he was the key officer who brought about Napoleon's defeat. Later in his career he was appointed Prime Minister of England.

IX THE GRANDE ARMÉE AT WAR

LIFE OR DEATH! THE BATTLE AT MARENGO

1800, June 15

Napoleon, now First Consul, turned his men towards Italy. He dispatched Victor for Marengo, south-west of Milan, and led in reserve forces through the St. Bernard Pass. Melas, who held the region for Austria, was in for a surprise. Then on the 14th of June, the fighting began.

Melas suddenly attacked Napoleon, thinking he led the main offensive. The French were clearly outnumbered, 10 to 1, but they anticipated reinforcements. Napoleon rode to the front line and encouraged his soldiers: "Take courage! You must hold out until our reinforcements arrive!" He looked to the south-east sky, wondering when his trustworthy officer Desaix would arrive. His men were being demolished on the battlefield. And, there were rumors that Melas had already reported victory to his superiors in Vienna.

Finally Desaix arrived, straight from the deserts of Egypt. He thrust his men into the Austrian advance. With new faith in their commander, Kellerman and Lannes added to the assault. Victor could not bear anymore losses and withdrew, but Marmont covered with his artillery. In the confusion of the battle Desaix was pierced through the heart by an enemy bullet, and his body was found afterward on the field.

The French were triumphant in the end, but having lost a brilliant officer in Desaix, it was a costly victory for Napoleon.

DESAIX

Louis Desaix led a glorious career. He became one of Napoleon's most trustworthy officers. In the Battle at Marengo he rushed back from Egypt to help overthrow Austria. However, in the chaos of war he was shot and died.

Napoleon was at the peak of his career when France clashed with Russia and Austria. Outnumbered from the start (55,000 to 93,000), he stalled for time with negotiations. He had to create time for Bernadotte and Davout to lead in reinforcements. His strategy worked well with Kutusov, the elder Russian general. Kutusov was more interested in discussion than war.

Buxhowden carefully observed the French battle array from the Russian camp and concluded they would fall with ease. The Pratzen Plateau was almost empty but for Soult, left guarding the path of retreat from the right flank. Buxhowden charged his men straight towards the right flank and challenged Soult to war. Suddenly he was surrounded; he played right into Napoleon's trap! Behind Soult, Davout swept in with reserves and ravaged the Russian troops.

Tsar Alexander I ordered Kutusov out from his central position to reinforce Buxhowden. However, once the central area weakened, Murat and Lannes had a clear path to descend from the highlands. Kutusov called in reserves, but Napoleon intercepted their advance. Bombarded from every direction, the coalition neared collapse.

When the coalition retreated they had incurred losses of 15,000 men, 20,000 fallen prisoner, 200 cannons, and 40 ensigns. French morale soared after victory at Austerlitz, which fell upon the one year anniversary of Napoleon's coronation. Cries of "Vive l'Empereur! Long live the Emperor!" echoed across the Pratzen Plateau in celebration.

Napoleon escaped from Elba Island and returned to the throne, only to be challenged by 700,000 soldiers of the new coalition army. The French army was only 200,000 strong. At the front were Wellington of England, and Blucher of Prussia. Napoleon knew he had to crush the spirit of the coalition in these two generals in order to win the next war. In early strategy he successfully repulsed Blucher and Grouchy routed them as they fled. Then with an army 72,000 strong, Napoleon challenged Wellington to send his 68,000 men forward for a decisive battle.

The soldiers faced a battlefield sodden with the water of recent rains. Their heavy artillery churned the ground and their cannons sank deep into the mud. Napoleon grew anxious watching his men push their heavy artillery through the mire. He resorted to cavalry, and sent out 10,000 men under Ney to occupy a central position at La Haye Sainte. Yet Ney misunderstood his orders and began an all-out attack with neither infantry nor artillery to support him. As a result, the French army was put in a vulnerable situation.

Napoleon needed support desperately and sent a messenger to Ney requesting reinforcements. Although Ney's men had fought bravely and captured La Haye Sainte, they had no strength to go to battle again. In a last effort to break free, Napoleon called up his last resource, the imperial guards, and sent them out in the advance. His army was ready for battle. At the same time a new foe rushed onto the scene from the east. Napoleon hoped it was Grouchy with French troops, but it was the Prussian army led by Blucher.

Napoleon refused to surrender at Waterloo despite his defenseless position. Inevitably, the French army suffered great losses in their final defeat.
